

Extraterrestrial Aliens and Reptilian Gods in the Quran

Part two in a series that reports on the Quran's explanation of extraterrestrial gods' interaction with humans in the not too distant past.

Alalu got word back to Nibiru that he'd located gold on earth. About 400,000 years ago, Anu sent his eldest son, the eminent scientist Enki, to earth along with a crew of 50 to begin the project of extracting gold from earth's seas. Enki established his base at Eridu in Mesopotamia. But that mode of gold acquisition proved too slow so Anu sent his younger son, Enlil, to earth and placed him in charge of mission earth. A squad of astronauts called Igigi, constantly orbited earth.

MARDUK

Enki relocated to Southern Africa, the Abzu, and established gold mining operations there. There exists evidence of advanced mining techniques employed in Southern Africa over 100,000 years ago. Obviously, no "ape men" were able to conduct highly technical mining operations. The people from Nibiru, or Anunnaki, lived incredibly long lives. Those assigned to the

When the female population of lulus grew the orbiting Igigi looked down on earth and decided to land and mate with them. This infuriated Enlil who was a strict segregationist. Enlil also complained that the lulus' incessant noise disturbed his sleep.

Knowing that Nibiru was approaching and would cause devastation on Earth, Enlil convinced the Great Assembly of Anunnaki to agree to let all the lulus and the lulu-Anunnaki mixed-species die in the coming Deluge. But Enki managed to get word to a human disciple, Utnapishtim, and taught him how to make a submarine. He also instructed him to collect the seeds of all the animals so they could repopulate after the flood-waters receded.

Utnapishtim and his family survived and Enlil had a change of heart and decided to allow the humans to replenish. They were desperately needed, to feed the hungry gods and to work for them. That is when "Kingship descended from heaven." The Anunnaki trained priest-kings to act as intermediaries between themselves and the lulus. Such kings were half-Anunnaki – half human children of the mating mentioned above.

But all was not peaceful among the gods. In the distant past a god named Zuen seized all the ME's (probably equivalent to computer discs, weapons systems and civilization programs) and a huge war occurred to recapture the ME's. Now, the god Marduk sought to build harsh, humiliating work in the mines felt they were in hell, a hell that lasted for thousands of years. Eventually, the Anunnaki miners rebelled, took Enlil hostage and threatened to kill him if their work load was not drastically reduced.

Anu arrived on a state visit and agreed with the miners. Enki proposed that he be allowed to make a lulu or primitive worker to do the slave labor on the Anunnaki's behalf. The Great Assembly of the Anunnaki agreed and authorized Enki and his half-sister, medical officer Ninhursag, to begin the work of creating a lulu prototype upon which the slave labor force would be modeled.

After numerous failures, hard work, trial and error, failed experiments and the creation of monstrosities, Enki and Ninhursag finally succeeded in making their "perfect" prototype. In some texts his name was Adapa. In later texts his name was Adamu. To make the Adamu, Enki had to "bind the image of the gods" onto his test-tube creation, i.e. he mixed some of his own DNA into the brew that transformed primitive "homoerectus" into modern man. The first cloned child was carried inside Ninhursag's own womb. Later, Anunnaki birth goddesses had to carry the clones. After the novelty wore off – and with the demand for lulus increasing – the birth goddesses no longer wanted to carry the human embryos, so Enki did another major DNA manipulation that permitted the hybrid clones to now procreate.

a rival space-port in Babylon. The main spaceport had been at Sippar ("Bird City") but, after the Flood, one had been built in the Sinai at the site of the stone landing platform at Baalbek. When Enlil got wind of Marduk's effort, he flew over Babel ("Gate of God") and destroyed the launch tower and the space program. Marduk was sent away from his capital city, Babylon, and given Egypt to rule. There, according to Sitchen, he was known as Ra, Amen and Tem.

At some point Marduk was involved in the death of his younger brother Dumuzi (Tammuz). He was ordered into exile by the Anunnaki judges. When he returned, he chased his brother Tehuti (Ningishzidda/Thoth) out of power in Egypt and Tehuti came to the Americas where he set up shop and gold mining as the god Quetzalcoatl.

Marduk then tried to seize the space port in the Sinai, but to prevent that, the spaceport and the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were nuked. The explosion raised a radioactive cloud, nuclear wind and fallout that killed innumerable people and gods alike.

To be continued...

Amir Fatir is a student of many ancient spiritual traditions including Egyptian, Sumerian, Yogic and Taoist systems. He is a novelist and social commentator and has studied the Quran since 1969. After teaching himself to read Arabic in 1976 he was surprised to find that many passages of the Quran corroborated the theories exposed by scholars who held that earth had once been colonized by ancient astronauts.